To pop the last item I would do: //pop last point void Stack::pop() { Point *points = points; numPoints--; delete[] points; } The problem is that I do not know how to access the element that was just deleted. I thought I could save the element as a pointer so that I could access it, but I am getting an error with that: deleted is not a pointer-to-object type Is there anyway that I can access the deleted element? A: You need to create the array again with new or allocate another memory. Don't forget to delete the array. For example, //append point onto dynamic array void Stack::push() { Point *points = new Point[numPoints+1];
