Introduction The amount of greenhouse gases being released into our atmosphere is a growing concern. Where fossil fuels were once believed to be carbon-neutral, they have now been discovered to be a primary contributor to rising temperatures and accumulating greenhouse gases. Our consumption of energy in the form of electricity and petroleum as well as other human activities has led to increasing levels of CO2 (carbon dioxide). CO2 is a gas and as such, does not remain in the atmosphere in the same way that water vapor does. Water vapor is a greenhouse gas, but CO2 is a non-greenhouse gas. We need both greenhouse
