"Not all oppression is dressed in the soft clothing of toleration, but we struggle together with those who struggle together." --

Desmond Tutu Reading Time: 3 minutes After 40 years, Internet giants like Google and Facebook are still denying the Tiananmen Square massacre was really a massacre and in the aftermath of the recent G-20 Summit, Chinese scholar and activist

Qu Bo made waves with his stern calls for people to speak out in support of the victims of the suppression. The result was a harsh warning for Google and Facebook. For Google and Facebook, the wide-ranging scope of the G-20 Summit is a chance to prove once again the company is "taking on issues that matter." For those of us who lived through the events in China, Google and Facebook's continued silence on the events is nothing short of crass. When the bloody crackdown on June 4, 1989, ended, over 200 people were killed and thousands were injured. It was one of the largest and most violent crackdowns in modern Chinese history. And Google, Facebook and other Western technology companies have largely kept silent. On Wednesday, a number of Chinese scholars and activists said they were "outraged and appalled" after the G-20 Summit issued a statement on the Tiananmen Square Massacre. And although the Summit didn't directly condemn the killings, many felt they had the potential to become a statement of "willful omission" and blatant ignorance of history. In response, the two companies issued a joint statement regarding the G-20 Summit. In the statement, the two companies said, "we value every person's right to express their views freely through the Internet and recognize the value of networks like Facebook in ensuring that people can freely exchange ideas and information." In other words, speaking out against the Tiananmen Massacre was a violation of freedom of speech. But in June, Google's spokesman said, "by hosting the Google Hangout, Hangouts are a means of communication, as well as a set of other tools that allow for meetings and conversations. In other words, it's really a very simple matter of where this has been, what it's meant to do and that's it." In other words, it's Google, Facebook and Twitter all about freedom of speech. Now, it's time they start f30f4ceada
