Haiti one week after the earthquake: Peter John Wood My wife and I just returned from a visit to Haiti a week ago. We have a feeling that many people want to know what we saw. So rather than taking a report, I decided to sit down and write a blog about some of the things we saw – just our impressions at the time. I also thought it might be interesting to go into some of the history behind the country. There are so many people involved in Haiti I hope this blog will help to put them all in context. I hope you find it useful and perhaps useful to you too. Peter John Wood We stayed in the Marriot Caravelle in Port Au Prince, a five-star hotel with 300 rooms and a thoroughly pleasant staff. The meeting rooms were very large, with good facilities. We were able to meet some of the people who live in the city, and we found the people in general to be kind and welcoming. We didn't really see any signs of poverty. We went to Jacmel on the southern coast. It is a charming small town on the Caribbean. It was obviously one of the better affected areas, with many houses completely destroyed and only a few left standing, but the beaches are still lovely, the marina is thriving, and there is much life in the town. The US is a big player in Haiti's reconstruction, and it has been doing a great job. There are people from all over the world, working as volunteers and professional staff, and there are many small NGOs (non-governmental organisations) working with them. The NGOs are doing everything from bridge construction to hotel renovations to planning for the next elections. Many of the NGOs are doing important work that is not well covered in the international media, so I'll try to include them in this blog. We had a very good meeting with some of the local doctors who are working in the local clinic in Jacmel. They are doing a good job and are coming to a lot of meetings at the hotel. For example, we went to a meeting one morning where the Royal College of Emergency Medicine (RCEM) from London held a meeting to raise awareness about earthquake first aid. The RCEM people are really invested in Haiti and are working hard to improve the situation. They have a good reputation in emergency medicine and they are very keen to improve the health of all Haitians. We went
