Aberrant expression of miR-204-5p mediates the effects of circITCH on regulating cell proliferation and apoptosis through inhibiting the expression of SOX9 in invasive breast cancer. MiR-204-5p was shown to play an important role in biological progression of breast cancer. CircITCH (ITCH) is critical for maintaining the normal breast cell pluripotency. In the present study, we evaluated whether circITCH could affect cell proliferation, apoptosis and epithelial-mesenchymal transition (EMT) in breast cancer cells, and the underlying mechanism of its actions. C3 (highly expressed miR-204-5p) and ZD (low expressed miR-204-5p) breast cancer cells were chosen for the study. The expression of circITCH and ITCH in C3 and ZD cells were measured by RT-PCR. SiRNAs were transfected into the cells to inhibit circITCH, ITCH, and SOX9 expression. Western blotting was used to detect the protein expression. CCK8 assay, colony formation assay, TUNEL, and Western blotting were used to detect the cell proliferation, apoptosis, and EMT status, respectively. Bioinformatic analysis predicted that circITCH contains the binding site for miR-204-5p. CircITCH and ITCH could be expressed in C3 and ZD cells. Silencing circITCH upregulated ITCH expression in C3 cells. Up-regulation of circITCH resulted in the down-regulated of ITCH and

SOX9 expression in C3 cells. We also found that circITCH mediated the inhibition of cell proliferation and promotion of cell apoptosis through decreasing SOX9 expression in C3 cells. We have demonstrated that circITCH was a tumor suppressor in breast cancer through inhibiting cell proliferation and promoting cell apoptosis. We also found that circITCH had a regulatory function in EMT. The results suggest that circITCH could be a potential target for treating breast cancer.
