I've read these answers and article. What i'm tring to achieve would be something like this: If i need two colors (e.g. red and blue) for the Report Viewer menu - i would like to use two highlight colors. However, if i want to use a darker font (e.g. black) for the report download link (instead of using the same lighter blue color as for the rest of the report items), i would like to use the same blue color for the details in Visual Studio (the font of the "Expression" and "Value" properties). Even if i have just one highlight color, if there is too light (like the color of a warning light), then i want to use a brighter highlight color (like red). I've tried with a "NullColors" dictionary that i want to populate in the ResXImport method based on the value of the "NumberOfHighlightedColors" key. This dictionary would be associated to the menu class of the report in the "Designer" view and the "Classes" view. Obviously, it doesn't work in an easy and convenient way (the values of the two keys of the dictionary shouldn't be in the same dictionary). I also tried to manipulate the Visual Studio Hierarchy directly in the designer view. First i added a new static class with colors in the property window. Then, in the designer view, i added a new category for the ReportViewerItem and added the same colors as the static class of this new property window category. But nothing of SXSW 2015 There's a reason that the announcement of SXSW 2015 was met with excitement across the internet and the newsrooms of popular music blogs. It's a sign of the times for Q3, but for the people who made the SXSW happen, not just financially. The confab announced that they would be expanding from three days to four in 2015. SXSW expanded from music to include comedy and film-slash-digital content, and the addition of this major annual celebration of offbeat culture puts it in the same category as South By Southwest. But in terms of sheer organization, there's something unique about SXSW. Whether it's the blow-out lineup or the attempts to make the festival more accessible and upbeat, it's clear that in attempting to bring together all cultures, the SXSW team brought the interest of every type of person and interest. So, while they grew with each successful festival, I think their continued growth is due to that diversity. People are drawn to SXSW because it's for everyone. That's only possible when you surround yourself with the people who contribute to your vision. For KXT, it was Grant Leese, who left even his position as co-manager to create the concept that was named Squarism. And that's only possible when the talent sees a collaborative effort that best represents what they want to promote or share. In other words, yes, it's quite a track record, but their efforts to deliver are both natural and hard-earned. Credit KXT for such a talented crew that can succeed as a complete machine. And while the studio engineer and audio, video, interactive and lighting personnel clearly represent a great assembly of quality individuals with their hands in as many buckets as they can, the connection between the creative, technical, financial, and production elements is key to making it work. The team responsible for the audio that I received is comprised of Peter Davis, Jason Mowery, Mo Volz, Jesse Onstage, and Michael Gawno. As a solo musician I can definitely recognize those names and their work. Not only did I enjoy three of the artists being profiled by The Q Magazine this year, but with Austin's diverse musical flavor, these people have always been part of my musical life, whether on stage or in a recording studio. Recording with them for 48 hours

What's new in Cyborg_Lab:

The closure of all eastbound lanes of Highway 401 will start at 8 a.m. Friday as crews begin to repair the rail barrier that fell overnight, which has led to a horrific toll on a busy suburban highway. The closure also affects all eastbound traffic on the Don Valley Parkway, which has been closed since Wednesday evening, when crews found that a portion of the rail barrier had fallen on the roadway. "It's been a nightmare for us," said Corey Fornash, the deputy director of Metrolinx, the transit agency that oversees the highways. "We'll do everything we can to keep our traffic moving as quickly as possible. But right now we're in a situation where the barriers are down, the barriers have fallen, and we have no way to get access into the rail bed to fix them." Mike Taylor, a spokesman for Metrolinx, says the agency is working as quickly as possible to get the traffic situation under control. The agency is in touch with the public works department, which will help detour traffic around the area. Metrolinx says the rail between the Port Lands and Green Pines will remain closed while the railway worker is on the job and for a day after. The agency hopes to restore full service as soon as possible. The Toronto Transit Commission says in a statement it is doing everything in its power to provide ongoing updates to users of the TTC, particularly during rush hour. Meanwhile, residents and business owners in the area are worried about the effect a closing highway will have on their businesses. Jennifer Maclachlan owns a hair-braiding salon located on Highway 401 in the city's west end. She says the shop is directly next to
