Rick AstleyQ: How to prevent timeout in my php program when the user retry? I have an php login script. This script gets the password from a db and checks if the password is same as the stored password. If it is match then a session will be set. All this is happening fine. My problem is when there is a little error that I cannot find, like if the user typr in the wrong password and it says to re-enter password. The main problem is that this process take a while and after a few time the user think that it is a valid method and it tries again.

So when I tried to find the error, my script time out and I loose the user. How can I prevent this because when the user press the submit button he is not logined. A: You should set a session variable on success on a page that will stop the attempt to login.

prepare("SELECT Password, Password_repeat FROM Users WHERE Email = :email");
$stmt->execute(array( "email" => $_POST["email"] ));
$searchresult = $stmt->fetch(); if($searchresult!= null) {
if($searchresult["Password"] == $_POST["password"]
