What's New in the?

Mallet or Malden is a simple utility that shows who's online and who's offline, even when they're working with Microsoft Lync and Skype. When is online, the icon shows green; when offline, it shows red. You can use this application to avoid disturbing your friends, it's equipped with an on screen widget that you can pin to your desktop, and it can automatically schedule when the application will check for new updates to the application. You can also keep a log of all conversations and chat conversations that you've had with your friends. Convenient, free and powerful, Mallet is more than just a simple status viewer, it's a help and support. A: Yeah, Lync is like Skype in a way, and I use this tool to get updates on calls. Installation isn't easy, but it works very well once you get it up and running. Q: Azure Function App daily schedule reminder (e.g. 'new tasks' every Monday) I am currently testing Azure Function Apps, and have created a schedule using the Azure Portal (I have done this by adding a new schedule (say "Monday"). The issue is: How do I easily create a function that will run every Monday? It seems I can only schedule functions to run at a certain time (which works great for instance if I only want functions to run at a specific time during the day. The Web App Role (specifically says: If you need to run a function daily, the only way to achieve this is to use scheduled triggers. This is of course correct. But what I'm trying to do is a scheduled task. E.g. E.g. Daily reminder, such as: "new tasks every Monday" Pardon my ignorance, is it possible to achieve this with a 'normal' function? (i.e. not through azure Scheduler, but manually) A: You can use the RunOnStartup setting to schedule a task, you can set it to execute only when the function is started (this is the default). [FunctionName("
