results of the tests are currently being calculated, so the exact date when the results will be available will only be known once they have been published. When the results have been calculated, a letter from the Environment Agency will be sent to all those who took part in the trial informing them of the results. The agency is working with the council on how best to use this information, once it has been received. Water samples have also been taken to the laboratory where they are tested for the presence of human and dog faeces and to see if other indicators of pollution have been found. Environmental Inspector Louise Chapman said: "If we find faeces or pollution indicators in the water we don't have a problem - it's when the sewage systems are overloaded that we can expect to see the most serious pollution problems. "Ensuring that we have good wastewater treatment systems that can cope with an increase in demand is one of the main priorities for Dorset County Council. However it is very important for us to monitor the performance of wastewater treatment systems and we hope this trial will help the public to get more information about the levels of pollution in their local area. "We hope that with the information we have come up with in this trial, we
