Regulation of membrane fluidity of intact sarcoplasmic reticulum vesicles by a sarcoplasmic reticulum-mitochondria-glyceraldehyde-3-phosphate dehydrogenase interaction. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the role of phospholipids of sarcoplasmic reticulum (SR) membranes in the regulation of membrane fluidity. Fluorescence polarization was used to measure changes in membrane fluidity in SR vesicles. Membrane fluidity is decreased upon activation of the adenine nucleotide translocator, the mitochondrial respiratory chain, and glyceraldehyde-3-phosphate dehydrogenase (GADPH), and it was suggested that the decrease in the phospholipid content of SR membranes is involved in the regulation of membrane fluidity. Fluorescence polarization measurement was employed to estimate changes in membrane fluidity of SR vesicles. The results of this study indicated that GADPH-mediated stimulation of phospholipids efflux from SR membranes was the rate-limiting step in the regulation of membrane fluidity of SR. The decrease in membrane fluidity of SR was related to the degree of fatty acid desaturation of phospholipid fatty acid, and this relationship was affected by the NAD(P)+/NAD(P)+H ratio in the SR vesicles. The results suggested that there was a coupling of membrane fluidity with phospholipid desaturation in SR membranes. Post navigation DC's
