N-terminal histidine-tag enhances protein expression and purification of recombinant heavy chain of dengue type-2 virus E-protein. Recombinant dengue virus vaccines are the most attractive candidates for preventing dengue virus infections. In the present study, we developed and evaluated for the first time the N-terminal histidine-tag (His-tag) strategy to express recombinant dengue virus E-protein using the baculovirus/insect cell expression system. We showed that the truncated His-tag-coding sequence (E Δ H/6His-tag) integrated into the E-protein open reading frame caused truncation or deletion of 3 amino acids in the C-terminal region of E-protein. The recombinant His-tagged E-protein (E/6His-tag) was expressed in Sf9 cells in a soluble form and the molecular size of the His-tagged E-protein (E Δ H/6His-tag) was larger than that of the non-tagged recombinant E-protein (E). The removal of the C-terminal sequence of E-protein led to the accumulation of more E-protein in the cytosol. These results suggest that the C-terminal region of E-protein. Furthermore, using an expression vector with the 6His-tag sequence under the control of the strong polyhedrin promoter in Sf9 cells, the recombinant E/6His-tag was obtained at high levels (10% of total cellular protein). In addition, the recombinant E/6His-tag was purified from the soluble fraction of Sf9 cells with a nickel-affinity column. The results showed that the His-tag is useful for enhancing the expression and purification of the recombinant E-protein.

The invention relates to a method for operating at least one subscriber station to be connected to at least one mobile radio network in a radio network comprising a plurality of base stations for transmitting/receiving connections to at least one mobile subscriber stations to be connected to a traffic channel in a connection time slot of a traffic frame of a plurality of connection time slots, with each connection time slot comprising said traffic frame of a plurality of connection time slots and with at least one of said connection time slots being inactive in at least one connection time slot. Such a method is known from U.S. Pat. No. 5,745,305. In that patent, a method of connection is described in which a connection time slot is always inactive and inactive time slots are distributed over a number of traffic frames for random activity of the connection time slot. Since the distribution time of inactive time slots is fixed, the transmission rate remains constant if only one inactive time slot occurs. The transmission rate decreases sharply in the case where a number of such inactive time slots occurs. This decrease in the transmission rate takes place in such a way that at least one traffic frame remains active. It is pointed out here that the transmission rate is the number of data elements which are transmitted per second. The data elements are either voice data elements or data elements for data transmission. A technical problem addressed by the invention is to provide a method of connection in which a transmission rate increases without substantial interference. The method according to the invention is characterized in that it comprises the steps of determining the inactive time slots of a connection time slot with reference to the traffic frame, said inactive time slots being distributed over said traffic frame and being active in at least one traffic frame, of assigning at least one data element from a data unit to the at least one active inactive time slot, and of transmitting said at least one data element in said active inactive time slot. According to the invention, the inactive time slot to be transmitted is determined by means of a number of inactive time slots distributed over a traffic frame. This means that the inactive time slot to be transmitted can be determined by means of the active time slots of the traffic frame. This implies that the number of traffic frames which must be used to ensure a desired transmission rate is reduced, since a number of inactive time slots can be associated with one traffic frame. This reduces the probability of losing data and thus saves network resources. On the other hand, the transmission rate can be increased without substantially interfering with other connections by switching the inactive time slot over to
