Your best option is to put it in a script tag (and make sure it's written before the closing body tag) or move it to your page head with tag: function foo() { alert("I work!"); } This is a simple and classic way to get script codes running, but there are more fancy ways like using ajax. See Q: Android WebView: is there a way to register javascript once on load? Lets say I have a web page with a big bit of javascript that needs to run. Is there any way to tell Android WebView to load the javascript at first time, and not to even bother if it is already loaded? Something like a global boolean variable. Thanks for help. A: You can register your JavaScript as a function to be called on page load: function registerScript() {
