In July, when the acting director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention refused to wear a surgical mask, White House officials sent him packing. In August, two staffers resigned to protest the administration's response to a novel coronavirus outbreak. At a time when many of the top White House officials were feeling the stress of the pandemic and the administration's bungled response to it, President Donald Trump and his allies were out promoting it. Last Friday, a memo appeared in the White House briefing room saying the administration was worried about a "level of media misinformation and confusion" about the crisis. This month, Trump tried to blame Democrats for the misinformation. "Because of the Fake News Media & their zero-credibility, (it is being said that) Democrats are creating the False & Deranged picture of wanting the Fake "Chinese Virus" to be spread in order to make President look bad."

Trump tweeted on Feb. 27. A media watchdog group has complained the mischaracterization of the outbreak for political purposes is "an attack on core First Amendment freedoms." To be sure, the president did
