The virus is believed to have been contracted from an infected child in the central city of Dasmariñas in the province of Cavite in the south-east of the country, according to the World Health Organization. The child was not vaccinated, and the family is believed to have developed the virus from an infected relative. Tests are due to be carried out on the family to confirm the case. "No poliomyelitis cases have been reported previously in the Philippines," said an official statement from the Philippines' health department. "The disease has been eradicated in the country since 1999. "The epidemiological investigation is ongoing. The whole family is now under medical quarantine and is receiving appropriate treatment. "As part of our regular mass vaccination program, there is also an enhanced focus and intensified vaccination activities in schools that have large population of children under five." The Philippines is one of 14 countries in Asia that have not been certified as polio-free by the World Health Organization. The Philippines completed its series of mass immunisation campaign in May 2015, but in the process of doing so uncovered several clusters of wild polio cases that had been missed by the WHO. The campaign was suspended in early February for two weeks after several people were diagnosed with the disease. "The global polio eradication programme is undaunted," said the WHO in a statement on Saturday. "This is a wake-up call to all people of the world to never, ever give up on polio." Next week, campaigns are planned to vaccinate millions of children in Pakistan and Afghanistan, as well as in Nigeria, Syria and Angola. The polio eradication campaign is funded by the Global Polio Eradication Initiative.Lost Tony Stark knows how to turn 'Superheroes' into the Super-rich, who couldn't imagine, the West Coast might play a role in his new venture.The one thing he knows, he can make everything fall apart in seconds.Iron Man has everything he could ever want, his Antenna, his mansion, his hoard of inventions, his
