Confusion while using xml in retrofit android

New to using retrofit in android. I know retrofit is just the way to make api calls. I have seen a lot of ways to use retrofit. I am trying to learn through examples on android docs. My understanding is to get response from server I first need to make http call and then attach the response on retrofit in android. Question: When I make http call retrofit creates a POJO for me and I can attach my response. Is there any case where I can directly attach the xml to the request. My current understanding is I need to make http call first and then attach the xml to the retrofit. Am I correct? If yes, what is the use of retrofit. I have seen code on github where I am not necessary to make the call. I am not trying to use retrofit to make such an calls, so my question is just concerned with reading example code on Which is not giving anything related to my question. Here is the sample code for the api call: @POST("/me") Call getUser(@Header("X-Token") String token);

A: To access the @Body from your retrofit Interface you have to make sure the method returns an Interface of your retrofit Interface. For example: @POST("/me") Call getUser(@Header("X-Token") String token);
public interface LoginService {
 @POST("/me") Interface
getUser(@Header("X-Token") String token);
} And you can add the @Body like this:
public interface LoginService {
 @POST("/me") Interface
